

Ambitious, extravagant, expensive—Carmel's $160 million Palladium, set to open this month, seems a fitting addition to the state's most affluent community. And while its cost has struck a sour note for some audiences, the state-of-the-art concert hall will forever change the tune of Central Indiana's cultural scene.

THE SOUND OF MONEY

The Sound of Money: The Palladium Rises Up in Carmel

Ambitious, extravagant, expensive—Carmel's $160 million performing arts center seems a fitting addition to the state's most affluent community. Its cost has struck a sour note for some audiences, but the state-of-the-art concert hall will forever change the tune of Central Indiana's cultural scene.

March 27, 2011 | Evan West | 0 Comments

It's November 10, 2010, and the Palladium, the showpiece concert hall of Carmel's new Center for the Performing Arts, finally has an audience. Officials, dignitaries, media, and curious Carmelites